You people who talk about "revolution" all the are the dumbest people I've ever seen j my entire life. Bunch of coddled white rich westerners who never lived through a revolution or discomfort in their cozy little life. Begging to have their rights removed by communists. Unreal.

I'm 55. My son was killed 2 years ago. I have lived in, and escape from, war zones in Africa. I lived without running water or electricity for more than 3 years. I have been arrested for protesting illegal American wars. My identity is easy to find, so it's pretty fuckin' verifiable: can you say the same? And my comment wasn't really my comment, it was JFK's. But, yeah, I'm pretty ready to throw down.

Right? They had her plates. Convince local or federal cops up at her door for impeding and make her go to court if they believe there's a case. There's zero justification for shooting her when he was away from the vehicle and the wheels were turned away from him; plenty of case law on that. It needs to be charged as murder. You don't get to act as judge, jury, and executioner just because someone upset you, even if you have a badge.

That was never the real issue, fiscal conservatism was just a smokescreen for the same thing we are seeing today. The difference now is that the hoods are off again.

Reagan's campaign manager and RNC chair, lee atwater, basically said so himself in an oj simpson "if I did it" sort of way, here's a 50 second NSFW audio clip of him explaining it to a reporter "off the record."

Remember that in the 1950s and 1960s conservatives literally murdered people to stop them from voting.

He created ICE, CBP, and TSA, all as authoritarian power grabs in the insane jingoistic period of "national unity" after 9/11. We knew this was the logical outcome, but anyone who tried to say otherwise was called "un-American" or a "terrorist-lover."

46 Reply ···

brodievonorchard • 1d ago

He put Border Patrol under Homeland Security, but it existed before him. I'd say there's an argument for TSA, but taking off shoes for 20 years because of one dude who got stopped by a passenger indicates that could use some work.

But yeah, we're seeing the inevitable outcome begin to be realized.

18 Reply ···

> I'd say there's an argument for TSA

Every test they've been put through they've failed. It doesn't matter though, because the tactics used on 9/11 were obsolete before all the planes had gone down on 9/11. No one assumes a hijacked plane is going to be ransomed like they did before it, the passengers will risk their lives to take out attempted hijackers because they know that risk is the only chance they have to survive. They did it to the plane headed to DC, they'll do it to any other plane in the future.

Which is to say, TSA was useless since its inception.

I watched that amazing mash up of the 10+ videos, and something I won't forget was the woman who said "you just shot my neighbor". As someone who grew up with Mr. Rogers as my hero, has always been involved in my NA, and currently a community coordinator for my apartment building - it made me want to fly out to Minnesota so I could do something. My neighbors as a single person without family, are the closest people to me. We protect each other, because we live so close each and every day of ours lives together. It's beautiful, and no one deserves that.

Friendly reminder for all neighbors to film just like these guys did - it's the only way we can prove what really happened and bring justice to Renee Good.

If there's one issue I have absolutely, unequivocally broken with the Dem/liberal position on forever, it's 2A. Mind you, I was never that in favor of gun control anyway (pre-Trump I was a lifelong libertarian. Post-trump I'm banned from r/libertarian for calling him the tyrant he is), as anything but the most minor safety standards just gets in the way of the people being able to withstand tyranny.

But we've pretty damn well proven that yes, governments can do a tyranny. And having options to do a proper resistance is important. No, my rifle won't beat a tank. But it's not FOR a tank.

Here's the deal with an insurgency. Soon locals will stop cooperating with the authorities, then those that do will face repercussions, then the average citizens will be actively apathetic to the authorities. No help, no warnings of potential danger, no rescue or shelter if needed. I am not in a good place at work right now because as the magats in the office were giving the expected "if she just complied" argument I said screw them. If I see an ICE vehicle in any accident I am just driving by. It could be on fire and I am not doing shit to render any aid or assistance. I will be actively indifferent to the plight of any ICE agents or collaborators.

If we can't agree that it shouldn't be okay for the feds to go door to door forcing people outside and threatening them with guns, shoving them into detention centers with no trial, no reason for the arrest, and holding them indefinitely then what WILL we agree on anymore?
